FEATURES

- 10 On the Roots and Status of the American Health Dilemma
Co-authors Dr. W. Michael Byrd and Dr. Linda A. Clayton discuss some of the groundbreaking research in their Pulitzer Prize-nominated "An American Health Dilemma" – two books that identify the origins and evolution and perpetuation of health disparities – explaining how the dissemination of this information can help advance public health for all in the United States.
- 27 Salud En Acción: Addressing Latino Health Disparities
Amelie G. Ramirez, founder and director of the Institute for Health Promotion Research at the University of Texas, discusses her efforts to use communications projects to address Latino health issues nationwide.
- 38 Asian Health Disparities: The Communications Connection
Eugenia Chien, a contributing editor at New America Media, examines Asian health disparities and efforts to address them through media and other forms of communication.
- 43 Chinese Medical Alternatives: Spreading the Word
Chien reports on how advocates of traditional Chinese medicine are using media and other forms of communication to gain more Western acceptance of this alternative approach to health care.
- 53 The Digital Difference: A New Media Model for Reporting on Health
Paul Bass, founder and editor of NewHavenIndependent.org, discusses his odyssey from mainstream news to the creator and operator of a new media site dedicated and financed, in part, to produce better coverage of health and health-care issues.
- 64 Coronary Health: Speaking From and About the Heart
Nichele Hoskins, who suffered two heart attacks before becoming a health writer for Heart & Soul magazine, examines the environmental, nutritional and health-care factors that help account for racial disparities in heart health.
- 77 Framing the Debate: A Strategy for Transforming the American Health Care System
A UCLA team of physicians and scholars – Mark A. Peterson, Dr. Helen DuPlessis, Dr. David Ganz, Dr. Neal Halfon and Arleen Leibowitz – present their "Blue Sky" agenda for creating "optimal health" and a communications strategy for explaining how and why the health-care system must be transformed.
